

THE UNIVERSITY OF WOLLONGONG CAMPUS NEWS

Number 20

A SCHOLARSHIP program established by the Illawarra Credit Union with the assistance of a Wollongong firm of solicitors – Kell, Heard, McEwan and Lough – has been providing employment experience for students since 1982.

The Illawarra Credit Union donates $10,000 each year for the scholarships. This year there were 15 scholarships awarded across a broad range of academic units.

These scholarships provide the opportunity for successful students to work in an academic unit on academic-related duties for 60 hours of employment. They are awarded on academic merit to students in second, third or fourth year, students therefore are of high academic standard.

Unique scholarships provide employment

The minimum requirement is a credit average – this year most of the students had an average approaching or better than distinction

The scholarship provides students with work such as assistance with research/special projects and working closely with academics therefore complementing the students' studies.

Academic units are always keen to participate in the scheme as quality work from excellent students is also of benefit to departments – the scheme is mutually beneficial to individual students and the academic units in which they work.

Mr Barry Kelly, General Manager of the Credit Union until his retirement last month, has taken a keen interest in the program since its introduction.

His only regret is that no other organisation in Wollongong has shown an interest in contributing to the scheme which would have made it available to more students.

Tough penalties for bad citizens

THE University is a community of nearly 11,000 people which, like all communities, can only function effectively if there are common standards of civility and courtesy, and if all members respect the rights and reasonable freedoms of others.

It is also part of a neighbourhood, which means all students and staff must take into account the feelings and sensitivities of those who live or work near the campus, but who otherwise may not be related to the University.

In particular residential properties must not be used for short cuts and noisy activities should not take place in their vicinity.

The University will not tolerate departures from these standards by members of its own community.

When alleged incidents are reported, they are investigated thoroughly, and where necessary appropriate action to be taken.

Some of the incidents where action has been taken so far this year are:

■ An undergraduate student has been expelled after the Vice-Chancellor's acceptance of a finding by the University's Investigation Committee that he unlawfully broke into another student's citizens

car. The matter was also referred to the police and the former student now has court convictions in relation to this and other criminal matters.

■ A student was fined $50 for failure to produce student ID when requested by University security staff, an additional $100 for unauthorised removal of a wheel clamp, and has been banned from vehicular access to the campus until March 2, 1992.

■ A student was fined $250 for offences involving exceeding campus speed limits, and failure to comply with the directions of authorised persons. He has also been banned from vehicular access until July 15, 1992.

■ A student found to have engaged in improper conduct in relation to University computers has been fined $150.

Several matters are pending involving allegations of cheating and other forms of misconduct in relation to the Autumn Session examinations.

Students' conduct is at all times subject to the Student Discipline Rules, Regulations for the Control of Vehicles Entering and Parking in the University's Grounds, and all rules relating to assessment and the conduct of examinations and the use of specific facilities such as laboratories, sporting facilities, the Union and the Library.

In addition the general law of NSW and the Commonwealth of Australia applies to all conduct on campus.

Where security staff or other authorised persons believe a breach of the criminal law may have taken place, police are notified as a matter of course.

Alleged breaches of discipline are investigated by the University's Investigation Committee.

This comprises the Deputy Vice-Chancellor or Pro Vice-Chancellor (Chair), the Chairperson of the Academic Senate (or nominee) and the President of the SRC (or nominee).

It can recommend to the Vice-Chancellor that an allegation be dismissed, that no further action be taken, that the student be reprimanded, fined, suspended, or expelled from the University and, in the case of examination or assessment offences, that a 0 Fail be recorded.

Souris visits campus

The Minister for Sport, Recreation and Racing, Mr George Souris, visited the University recently for discussions on the links between the University and the Illawarra Academy of Sport and a briefing on the research being undertaken in the Department of Human Movement Science into elite sports performance. He was welcomed by the Vice-Chancellor, Professor Ken McKinnon

Ian McGrath in the University of Wollongong's new theatre

AN EDUCATION in the navy may not seem a logical beginning for a theatre designer, but Ian McGrath, lecturer in Theatre Technology and director of the Theatre Strand in the School of Creative Arts, began in a career far removed from the theatre.

McGrath is the co-ordinator behind productions such as the recent highly successful "A Mid Summer-Night's Dream", and is the theatre technology adviser for the new theatre at the western end of the Campus.

McGrath's first experience of theatre was while he was training at the Naval College at Jervis Bay.

He describes the Nowra Amateur Theatre Society's production of "The Desert Song" as "awful, but I loved it".

Returning from Vietnam, after 10 years' service, McGrath decided he would rather pursue a career in theatre.

He joined the Ensemble Theatre and began training, primarily as an actor, but became involved in all aspects of theatre, including costume design, a facet of theatre he still enjoys.

Down to his last two weeks' savings, McGrath became Stage Manager at the Marion Street Theatre in 1973, and has worked in theatre ever since.

A mechanical aptitude developed into a talent for the technical side of theatre.

McGrath has been involved in the design side of more than 200 productions throughout Australia.

Currently specialising in lighting design, McGrath has also directed and written plays, and lectured for the National Institute of Dramatic Art (N.I.D.A.) and the Ensemble studios.

In addition, his guide to professional stage lighting - A Process for Lighting the Stage - has been published and successfully received in the USA.

McGrath sees theatre as a collaborative art form, where all aspects work together, with the director providing the focus for a production.

In keeping with the philosophies of the School of Creative Arts, since his arrival in Creative Arts four years ago, the Theatre Strand has expanded to provide students with subjects in all aspects of the theatre, with a practical emphasis.

Awarded a Masters in Creative Arts at the University of Wollongong in 1989, McGrath is working on his doctoral thesis, a revival of the French "Theatre of Light and Sound" into modern theatre; and completing his second book on theatre design.

Lighting director for the "Monsters of the Deep" exhibition, in 1992 he will continue with similar projects for the Australian Museum.

He aims to move into directing and producing, although he enjoys teaching in a field he has been active in for 20 years.

Consultant to the University for the designing of the Performance Space in 1989, McGrath has been an integral part of the designing and fitting-out of the University's new theatre.

A mechanical aptitude developed into a talent for the technical side of theatre

He sees this theatre as providing flexibility for Theatre students, giving them the experience of a different type of theatre space; it will also encourage theatre companies to visit the Illawarra. Visiting acts would be encouraged to give workshops with students, and possibly involve students in productions, giving them direct access to the theatre industry.

The theatre will be opened with a concert on October 11.

AVCC seeks clarification from DEET on flexibility of load targets

IN A media release on June 18 the Australian Vice-Chancellors' Committee (AVCC) drew attention to an over-enrolment situation that might prevail in universities in 1992.

The AVCC pointed out that universities might be forced, reluctantly, to offer fewer places to commencing students.

During subsequent discussions with the Minister for Higher Education and Employment Services, the Honourable Peter Baldwin, and officials from the Department of Employment, Education and Training (DEET), AVCC representatives explained that it would assist institutions to know that they could renegotiate load targets with DEET when difficulties became apparent.

It was suggested that a process be established whereby dialogue with DEET was possible when problems arose.

Each institution's situation needed to be considered individually.

At present no flexibility in load targets was perceived by institutions.

Ideally, the AVCC argues, flexible commencing and total load targets, within a range, should be established.

The AVCC representatives also stressed that it was AVCC policy that there should be no reward to institutions for over-enrolling.
